

B

ABSTRACT

An electromagnetic device has at least one magnetic circuit and at least one electric circuit such as a winding. The magnetic and electric circuits are inductively coupled to each other. The device has a control arrangement adapted to control frequency, amplitude or phase of the electric power to and from the device and for controlling the magnetic flux in the magnetic circuit.